

In a country where innovation should be rewarded, not attacked, a better version of radio--satellite radio--should not be singled out for limitations to what it can offer the public. Traffic and weather information should not be limited to the locals who know which local station has this information. Those of us who travel by car and don't know how to quickly access such important travel and weather information as we travel through a particular part of the country are denied information which would make our travel more efficient and safer. Satellite radio provides a real service to its subscribers and should not be limited to what it can provide.
